AGENTS OF STATE LIQUOR CONTROL BOARD MAKE RAID AT RESTAURANT OF JOHN WILNO; HEARING ON NEXT MONDAY

Officers Claim They Found Three Quarts of Alleged Alcohol

ON EVE OF RENEWAL

Have Been Inspecting Some Places Where Licenses Were To Be Renewed

State Liquor Control Board agents made a surprise visit to Bristol again yesterday and raided the restaurant of John Wilno, 810 Wood street. The agents claim they found about three quarts of alleged alcohol in the Wilno place and the proprietor was notified to appear for a hearing Monday night. Wilno has been conducting a restaurant at the Wood street address in addition held a license to sell liquor.

The state agents have been in this city recently gathering evidence in inspecting some of the places, the proprietors of which have applied for renewal.

ANOTHER LWD PROJECT TO BE STARTED SOON

Seventy Men to Make Survey and Urge Improvement of Property

MAKE HYGIENE SURVEY

Two additional LWD projects—one of which is already underway and the other to be started in the near future—are expected to provide employment for additional men in Bucks County. It is now being planned to have canvassers visit the various property owners to question them concerning property improvements.

These canvassers will urge the property owner to make necessary improvements so as to provide employment for artisans who are out of work at the present time. It is expected that approximately 70 canvassers will be given employment in making this survey and that their work will provide work for many additional men and also provide a demand for building materials used in the improvements.

The project which is underway now is a hygiene survey being made of the various industries. Men employed by the LWD are calling at the various industries and making a survey as to the number employed and the sanitary conditions of their places of employment.

Sensational Attractions Are At The Grand Today

Two sensational attractions will be presented at the Grand Theatre this afternoon and evening. Each attraction in itself is remarkable. The first production entitled "The First World's War" is creating a sensation by the exposure of the secrets from the guarded archives of the world's great nations as published in book form by Lawrence Stallings. This picture is picked as one of the ten best pictures of the year. It does not so much think carry you through a gruesome war of horror, but it is presented in such a fine manner that it takes you through the ages of history and events of the world that it is practically the duty of everyone to view this wonderful expose and to let us all know and see for ourselves just what does take place that costs us as the pawns of war. It is authentic with pictures taken from the secret vaults of the great nations which have never been viewed except by officials. It tells the truth at last after 20 years of waiting.

The other attraction, "La Cucaracha," is one of the most dazzling dramas of splendor in melody, songs and dances, that has yet been created. It is laid in Old Mexico with Don Alvarado and a cast of Mexican dancers and singers, done in beautiful colors. There will also be the comedy, "Sailors Behave," and News Events of the day, with thrills presented by Buck Jones in "The Red Rider."

CHIEF AND ONE OTHER MEMBER OF LANGHORNE FIRE COMPANY HONORED BY FIREMEN AND AUXILIARY UNIT DURING LAST MARCH

Phila. Harmonica Band Appeared Here During That Month—New Edifice of Newtown Presbyterian Congregation Dedicated—Public School Buildings Here Painted

A review of the files of The Bristol Courier for March of 1934 follows, the high-lights of news events being here featured:

1st—The Philadelphia Harmonica Band, under direction of Albert N. Hoxie, appeared in Bristol Presbyterian Church, giving a concert under auspices of the church choir. Ettore Manleri, 1933 harmonica champion, was present to give selections also.

It was stated that a total of $14,400 would be Bucks County's share of the first distribution of liquor license money. Bristol borough headed the list of districts and was to receive $2200, according to a message from Harrisburg.

Cruiser H. Crossley was fined $5 for operating a bus without proper license. The arrest occurred in Trenton, and the man informed he could not operate a bus between Trenton and Yardley without a license from the Trenton City Commission.

State highway patrolmen and Bristol police made a drive against motorists operating cars without the proper driver's license. Over a dozen were caught in the net which was spread from the approach to the Burlington-Bristol bridge to Mulberry and Pond streets.

Francis F. Bodine was elected president of the Tullytown board of health.

2nd—South winds, rain and fog did much to cut the ice and snow from the sidewalks and roadways, but travel in this area was impeded by the heavy fog and water-covered ice. Many anxious eyes were cast at the river where floods threatened.

3rd—Langhorne Fire Co. and auxiliary honored Pierson M. Candy, chief for 36 years, and his assistant, Harvey W. Wells, who had been a member of the company for 51 years. Gifts were presented to the men.

4th—The new edifice of the Newtown Presbyterian congregation was dedicated. The house of worship, of early American Colonial architecture, was filled for the dedicatory service, the dedicatory sermon being delivered by the Rev. Dr. Arthur H. Simpson, moderator of the Philadelphia Presbyterian North.

5th—It was announced that Morrisville borough made a profit of about $6,000 on its water plant during the previous year.

Bensalem Township high school was replaced on the accredited list of schools of the Middle Atlantic States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

The ice jams which blocked the upper Delaware River, causing floods, became a serious menace. The Morrisville industrial siding was wiped out along a big stretch.

6th—Margaret Mauro, Bristol, who pleaded guilty to receiving stolen goods, and who served part of her sentence in the Bucks County Prison, was released on parole on the condition that she take care of her child and live with her husband. Mrs. Mauro had been arrested in connection with the robbery of an automobile of a Trenton jewelry salesman here on December 20, 1932. It was alleged that she received some of the stolen goods.

Fanned by a high wind sparks from a chimney wrought havoc at the residence of Andrew Moore, on the farm of Joseph Tatum, Oxford Valley. The damage was placed at $2000 to $2500.

Publication rights, subscription lists and advertising contracts of a magazine were sold for $10, and a weekly newspaper brought $100 at the bankruptcy sale of J. Allen Gardy, Doylestown. The total amount of the sale was given at $1,970.

8th—A prominent Newportville woman, Mrs. Helen L. Birkey (nee Black), died at her residence as the result of an attack of pneumonia. She was the widow of John W. Birkey, who for many years was state deputy factory inspector. The deceased was president of the Newportville Needlework Guild, and had served for some time as secretary to the Bristol Township supervisors.

A bill was to be introduced into Congress whereby it was provided that the Federal Government shall return approximately $2,500,000 for farm land taken and on which was erected the Tullytown Bag Loading Plant. Eight Bucks County families were interested.

Missing for four months, the disappearance of her son resulted in Mrs. Elizabeth Warren moving from this borough to Philadelphia in an effort to locate him. The missing lad, John Warren, 17, was a former student of Bristol high school. He had disappeared in November.

9th—Sixteen painters engaged in painting the public school buildings here, quit work when their hourly rate was cut five cents. The halt occurred after receipt of word from the government to cut the rate from 75 to 70 cents per hour.

Mrs. Theodore B. Megargee was named president of Bristol Travel Club, succeeding Mrs. Horace H. Burton.

Newtown borough council elected William S. Tomlinson as burgess to fill the unexpired term of the late Henry Afflerbach. The term expires on January 1, 1938.

10th—The ninth annual installation of officers of Morning Star Chapter, No. 395, Order of the Eastern Star, was held here, followed by a banquet.

At a meeting of Bucks County Firemen's Association held at Quakertown, the fire loss in three months was shown to be $81,000. The fire

FIREMEN GET GIFT

MORRISVILLE, Jan. 5.—Speaking on the small fire loss here during the past year, James E. Groome, Yardley, president of the Bucks County Firemen's Association, appearing before a group of firemen on New Year's eve at Union fire house, complimented Morrisville and its fire department for its very fine record.

Mr. Groome noted the splendid cooperation between the borough of officials, firemen and citizens and of the remarkable strides made in the borough.

County Fire Marshal William L. Stackhouse, Hulmeville, told some interesting things about fires in the county during the year. He said the fire loss in Bucks county was less in 1934 than during the previous year, and urged firemen to do everything possible to further reduce the loss.

Frank Miller, who retired as president of the company to become assistant chief of the entire department, presented the annual report of Union Company for 1934. This showed there was a fire loss last year of only $1,000 in the borough. Chief Miller reported 82 alarms answered, one at a factory, 18 dwellings, two trolley cars, one garage, 42 grass fires, six chimneys, nine automobiles and two false alarms. The inhalator was used four times with one person revived. There was one death from fire.

In the out of town district the fire loss was $21,000 and most of this was from barn fires.

During the evening one of the features was the presentation to the fire company by the ladies' auxiliary of a check for $200. The women raised this money by various affairs they conducted. The presentation was

FINDS LIVE BABY ON SEAT OF AUTO AS HE DRIVES OUT GARAGE

Male Youngster Believed To Be Between Three and Four Months Old

SUFFERED EXPOSURE

Medical Attention and Food Administered by Harriman Hospital

A baby boy judged to be between three and four months of age was found alive and crying on the rear seat of an automobile in a private garage here today. The automobile is owned by John P. Betz, Jr., and was in his private garage in the rear of 825 Radcliffe street. The garage faces on Cedar street, near a vacant lot and in a little traveled section. Discovery of the baby was made by Mr. Betz as he entered his car to drive it out of the garage at about 10 o'clock this morning. The car was placed in the garage at midnight by Mr. Betz. The doors of the garage and car were not locked.

"I went to enter my car and heard a noise apparently coming from the rear seat. On investigation I found the baby lying there," Mr. Betz, a prominent attorney, told the police, whom he summoned at once upon making the discovery.

The baby was taken to the Harriman Hospital by Chief Jones and Anthony Russo, county detective. Medical attention was given the youngster and he quickly devoured a bottle of milk.

In the opinion of the hospital nurses the youngster is between three and four months of age. He has blue eyes, sandy colored hair and to all appearances is healthy.

The baby was warmly clothed but it is believed suffered somewhat from exposure. There were red blotches upon the child's face, due it is believed to exposure.

The clothing was neat and clean. There was warm underclothing and a flannel band, a white embroidered dress and a blue and white sack and cap. The child was also wrapped in a blue and white and a pink and white blanket.

Award Prize To One Who Secured Most Members

At the regular meeting of American Legion Auxiliary, Robert W. Bracken Post, held in the post home last evening, Mrs. Elizabeth Delker received a prize for securing the largest number of members for 1935. There were three new members welcomed last evening, namely Mrs. Spangler, Cornwells Heights; Mrs. William Riley and Mrs. Johnson, Bristol. Initiation of new members occurred.

Mrs. Harold H. Dettmer presided. During the meeting Mrs. William Griffiths stated that the sum of $16.56 had been cleared on the card party which she supervised last month. The rehabilitation and child welfare chairman, Mrs. Thomas Livesey, announced that the sum of $20 had been expended by the local auxiliary for Christmas work in the state.

A decision was made to have every member earn $1 by June 1st, this money to be placed in the general fund.

Fete Mrs. D. Gallagher At Torresdale Manor Home

At the home of Mrs. David Gallagher, Torresdale Manor, a group of friends gathered yesterday to help celebrate the occasion of her birthday. Luncheon was served and cards enjoyed. Mrs. Gallagher was presented with a bracelet by her friends.

The guests were: Mrs. Thomas G. Hawkes, Mrs. Burd Fowler, Mrs. Robert Pearson, Mrs. Leo Lynn, Mrs. Herbert Banes, Mrs. Joseph Schofield, Mrs. William Smyrl, Mrs. Philip Eckert, Mrs. Irvin Edleman, Mrs. Walter G. Stilwell, Mrs. William O'Dea, Edgely; Mrs. Roland Quinn, Tullytown; Mrs. Fred Krings, Bristol.

Sand-Glasses, Old Watches, Used to Illustrate Talk

An interesting meeting with a "timely" topic was enjoyed by members of the Travel Club yesterday afternoon.

Fred J. Cooper, Philadelphia, introduced by Mrs. Roy Tracy who had charge of the program, gave a talk on "Time and Timekeepers." Mr. Cooper quoted Benjamin Franklin as saying "Time is more than money. Time is life, for time is the very stuff life is made of."

Mr. Cooper told how the priests of Babylon studied the stars and moon, and worked out a calendar. The history of time from sun-dials, water clocks, and sand-glasses, to the first clocks and watches, was discussed.

A collection of quaint old watches, candles, and sand-glasses was used for illustration.

COLLEGE ENROLLMENT

Although slightly below "the prosperity plateau of a half dozen years ago," the full-time college enrollment of the United States is 5 per cent above that of last year and this year's freshman registration compared with last year's has increased 14 per cent.

Readers of these figures will enquire at once about the causes, of course. Dr. Raymond Walter, president of the University of Cincinnati and chairman of the committee on standards of the American Council of Education, the agency that surveys college enrollment annually, says the increase may be explained "as being due somewhat to student aid by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration; somewhat to the difficulty high school graduates have in landing jobs these days; somewhat to improved economic conditions in certain sections of the country; somewhat to the persistent faith of American fathers and mothers that higher education will benefit their children; so that they make sacrifices to send them to college."

Many will note that "improved economic conditions in certain sections of the country" is at least given a place among the factors accounting for Dr. Walter's figures. Even slight signs of economic improvement are cheering.

EVERYONE WALKS

There is food for interesting thought in the fact that, while we write and speak of pedestrians as though they were a class apart, they actually are not. Indeed, we may be thankful that in America the word "cavalier," which once used to describe the horseback-riding as distinguished from the walking classes, has found no such modern counterpart as "automobilist" or "gasolinier."

The heat with which we argue the rights and duties of the pedestrian and the motorist easily might persuade the proverbial visitor from Mars that here were two hostile classes on the point of flying at each other's throats. There is no subject on which we as a nation more readily become indignant. In fact, if it were not for the saving circumstance that the American pedestrian at any moment may step into a motor car and become an "automobilist," or the other way around, almost any slushy day really would provide all the provocation needed for a bloody insurrection.

We may be thankful that in America, at least, pedestrianism is alternately an art and a vice, but never, never a badge of class distinction.

CHRISTMAS THE YEAR 'ROUND

One more thought on Christmas. Let's try to keep our Christmas spirit through the year, and not discard it as we discard a mask merely because Dec. 25 has passed.

If we all could be as amiable and generous and thoughtful and kind and considerate and unselfish throughout the year as we are these days; if we lived as much for others and as little for self as we do the second two weeks of December, what a wonderful world this would be!

And that applies to families, neighbors, cities, states, nations.

made by Mrs. Robert Wemmer, a member of the auxiliary and director of the State Firemen's Ladies' Auxiliary.

During the evening the group stood in silence in memory of the members of the fire company and auxiliary who died during the year.

Remarks were also made by Justice of the Peace Neal Nolan, former Councilman Charles C. Young, Dr. William H. Kunsman and Borough Solicitor Willard S. Curtin.

Councilman John G. Bleasdale was toastmaster and introduced the company's new president, Winfield S. Cox, who gave the address of welcome. Mr. Bleasdale also introduced Councilman Frank S. Hibbs, who was one of the guests.

During the evening a turkey dinner, prepared by members of the ladies' auxiliary, was served.

HOLLYWOOD COMPELS FRENCHMEN TO DON "TAILS," WHITE TIES

By Nadia de Beaud

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

PARIS—(INS)—Hollywood's influence has succeeded where lay sermons and editorials failed. That is, compelling Frenchmen to put on "tails" and white ties.

How the cinema proprietors performed this miracle nobody knows, but the fact remains they did. They simply put "full dress de rigueur" on the invitations and the order was obeyed.

As a result, the best dressed crowds in Paris today are to be found at the first nights of American films. Parisians quite readily don evening attire, stovetop hat and white tie, to see the beauty of Marion Davies or the suave performances of George Arliss.

First nights at the cinema now surpass in fashionable smartness the premiere of a play here. Indeed, when Sacha Guitry sent out invitations for the first performance of his latest play, "The New Testament," he made this appeal:

"We hope our friends will do for our play what they do regularly for an American movie; namely put on full dress."

The best legitimate drama has been able to do is one full-dress night a month.

DRESS INITIALS ARE POPULAR WHEN MADE EMBROIDERED EFFECT

By Nadia de Beaud

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

PARIS—(INS)—There always has been something most attractive about embroidered initials on dresses, especially when these are so designed as to form an ornamental patch on a pocket or bodice.

Mrs. James Corrigan, the well known American hostess who spends much time abroad, wore just such a dress of jersey at the Crillon bar. It was beige with a basque effect and pockets the small collar crossed in front, the initials embroidered on the side. A blue buckin belt and a matching blue belt had completed the outfit.

This initial craze has been most noticeable recently: curious silver brooches forming clumsy letters are much worn not only on dresses but also on hats. They are so cleverly made that only the closest examination reveals the letter, the effect from a distance being that of just a bright jewel.

"BEACH BEAUTY" by ARTHUR SHUMWAY

CHAPTER XLV

Pete took out his remaining cigarettes and fumbled for a match. "Cigaret?" he asked.

The kid shook his head. "Got a match?" Pete asked.

The kid put his left hand into the side pocket of the gray coat and tossed Pete a handsome silver cigarette lighter. Pete lit the cigarette, then casually took out his school handkerchief and touched the flame to it. From the corner of his eye he could see the kid watching him curiously. There was still no expression on the boy's face, but his big liquid eyes had widened.

Pete dropped the handkerchief onto the cheap cotton rug beside the bed and between the kid and himself. The flame spread to the rug, but Pete lay back casually and puffed at his cigarette as if, having suddenly lost his mind, the situation satisfied him perfectly.

The boy looked at Pete for the first time with a real expression on his face—one of fear and amazement. This was something out of his line; that was clear.

The flames rose and caught the overhanging sheets of Pete's bed, but still Pete lay back, a bland smile on his face, as if sun-bathing on the pleasant sands of Daytona Beach.

Suddenly the boy snarled and rose, began stamping at the rug with a small narrow foot. This brought him nearer to Pete than he ever had been before. And, putting all his faith, all his hope in one kick, Pete caught the kid in the face with his heavily shod foot. He was up and upon him instantly, the two of them in the burning rug. One punch dazed the boy, another put him out. Pete pulled him off the rug, threw the rug onto the bed, still burning, and began to act swiftly, making his plans as he worked. He peeled off the boy's coat and trousers, put them on, jammed the kid's hat onto the back of his head and put the two guns in his hip pockets. The clothes were torn too small but he wasn't going to let that matter.

Pete tiptoed forward, to the door, found it unlocked, and opening it cautiously, dragged the boy through and dumped him in the hall. Then, a better plan came to him. He lifted the kid and stole along, using him as a shield in case someone started shooting. He took one of the kid's guns in his own right hand, cocked it for quick action, kept it ready.

He met no one. Evidently he was in a flat, not badly furnished except for the cubbyhole in which he had been a prisoner. He listened carefully at the door, heard nothing. Dropping the kid on a divan he began walking around looking for whatever might be found.

Suddenly footsteps came to him from the hall outside. He ran to the divan, dumped the boy behind it where he wouldn't be seen and got behind it himself. A lock clicked, a door opened and a dark, heavily-lidded young man in a snow-capped hat, snow-gray spats and a brilliant blue suit, came in jingling a key in his hand. He walked to a door, put the key in, turned it, opened the door, and started inside.

"Well, howzit today, kid?" he said, as he closed the door.

Instinct tensed all Pete's muscles. He stole forward to that door and listened, just in time to catch the words, "Mr. Harrow." And the voice was Kay's.

Pete raised the gun, threw open the door and stepped in.

"Put your hands up!" he snapped at the man.

The man stared at him incredulously, but slowly began to raise his hands. Kay, in a bedraggled evening dress, stared with equal incredulity at Pete, then began to smile with utmost relief.

"Pete!"

door and looked down. Wooden steps led from landing to landing and finally down into a deserted alley.

Pete ran back to the bedroom. "Come on, Kay."

Kay followed him out. As he shut the door he turned the key, locking the man in.

Kay and Pete ran through the flat to the back door. As they left Pete heard another door open somewhere in the flat. He looked the back door, and seizing Kay under one arm, started down the steps, taking them two at a time, half dragging, half carrying the girl, who was losing her high-heeled dancing slippers. Above in the flat, he heard shouts and a pounding noise.

Once more Earl Harrow was hating himself quite thoroughly. It was a state he found himself in with some regularity but not very often. This time it was worse than ever. He had done too many things to too many people, he had made too great a mess of everything he had touched. He had paid the ransom money for Kay, of course, but he could not be sure that Caspar—he knew well enough Caspar was behind it—would keep the bargain, and he could not be sure that Caspar wouldn't find he was trying to turn him down. If he did then certainly Caspar might take revenge through Kay, or might at the very least, refuse to turn her over without further payment. Harrow cursed himself for having been so impulsive and vindictive as to try to get Caspar instead of being satisfied that the ransom was no higher. Certainly Kay was well worth it, even from a business point of view at this stage. And paying it and admitting the racketeer had won his game, had evened up for Harrow's obstinacy in the theater racket fight the season before.

And that wasn't all, Harrow reflected bitterly, as he paced up and down in his study. He had done a wrong perhaps to Pete Ryan, he had done a wrong to Kay by trading with her, and he had done a wrong to Ida Campbell and one to Ida by allowing her even to suspect that he might have a serious interest in her. And, now the latest was the word that Carlotta Vestra was back in town. He had read in a Broadway column the night before:

"Carlotta Vestra and she's back in town, vaddy vaddy mysterious about it all. Earl Harrow who used to sigh in tandem with Carlotta is being seen with Kay Owen, that Florida red-head who did the rescue act when Harrow was south this fall."

Harrow's emotions flailed him when he read that item. He didn't know whether to be glad Carlotta was back, or sorry, or whether even to be glad that she would be sure to read the mention of Kay Owen. Even, being glad of the latter, he wouldn't have been able to tell him- self honestly that he was merely hoping Carlotta would be piqued by a little of a little revenge on her for trotting off to the Riviera and getting this Prince who now seemed to be (at least temporarily) on ice.

Women, women, women . . . some day, maybe, he'd learn. He'd thought that at twenty, at thirty, and he was still thinking it, but now with a healthy dash of cynicism. Almost all his trouble, past and present, had been because he had been susceptible.

He thought bitterly: If Carlotta had to come back into town, why did it have to be now?

He wanted no trouble with Carlotta—not that there might be any. Except that he remembered her dramatic, unbelievably violent temper which produced rages that he liked to believe transcended mere insanity but reached epic proportions requiring musical accompaniment by a sort of combined Wagner-Stravinsky.

What a woman, Carlotta! He had known plenty of temperamental actresses but none of them had been in it with Carlotta.

His thoughts were taking this course when he heard steps outside his study and a familiar voice: "Mr. Harrow?"

Pete Ryan, of course. Now what? He sighed and stepped to the door. "Yes?"

fitted gray suit, but Kay, looking a little the worse for wear in the evening dress she had worn to his party.

"Pete—Kay!"

Harrow rushed forward and put his arms around her, then took her by the shoulders and held her off at arm's length, looking at her.

"Lord, but it's great to see you again! And you're all right?" he asked anxiously.

"Absolutely!" she assured him. "I expect I look a sight."

"Never mind how you look! I was crazy with worry. And Pete! What's happened to you?"

It was a dramatic story that Pete told. "They nabbed me on the way to the station," he said. "I walked up toward town from here, you know, when I left, and a car picked me up to give me a lift. The next thing I knew I was tied up and blindfolded. They carried me somewhere into the city. I knew that. Even they chuckled me in a stuffy little room with nothing but a bed and put some big-faced young gunman on me as a guard. Nothing happened for a while and the kid wouldn't tell me a thing. Finally they blindfolded me again, dragged me to a telephone and somebody said he was going to ring your number and get Kay, and I was to say I was hurt and ask her to come to me at a certain address. Of course, I wouldn't do it and they started beating up on me. I took it as well as I could till finally the big-voiced fellow told them to stop and he talked to me again."

"He said 'Listen, lad—don't be a sucker! You're not worth a nickel to us except to save a little time and trouble. We're going to get the Queen kid anyway. If we don't get her tonight, then tomorrow when she goes into town, or anytime we get the chance, even if we have to bump a couple of mugs to do it. Now, she ain't going to be hurt. Get that through you. It's just a business proposition with us. But if we have to grab her by force, somebody's going to tie a slug or two and it might be her. Just by accident in case anything happened. So, if you want to do the right thing, just get onto this phone and do like you're told.'"

Pete told his part in the trap with obvious shame. "But I saw it the way he said—as the least of two evils."

"You did the only thing you could do," Harrow assured him.

"Of course, Pete," Kay said. "Well, that's what happened. Then they stuck me back in my room till I was able to make a break. I knew they really had Kay."

Pete told of his experience with the kid and together through the alley and had managed to find a cruising taxi before they were pursued.

"We just kept the one cab till we got here," Pete remarked. "He's outside now, waiting for his money."

"He'll get it—and more," Harrow said warily. "It certainly was a good thing you found him."

"You're telling me," Pete asked with a sigh of fatigue.

"Pete," Harrow said. "This is the second time you've saved me from my own foolishness and the second time you've saved Kay. I don't know what you intend doing, but I'm telling you what you are going to do: you're going to stay here with us at least until this blow over and we're safely under way to take 'no' for an answer."

"Well . . . thanks, Mr. Harrow," Pete replied. He turned to Kay, smiling shyly. "I don't know, though."

Kay seized his hand. "Of course, Pete! I'm not going to let you go."

"All right. That's the answer," Pete said.

"Good boy!" Harrow exclaimed. "Now I'll pay off that cab driver."

Pete turned to Kay, smiling ruefully. "Well, we can't seem to stay apart, can we?" he said.

"You're telling me," Kay asked with a sigh of fatigue.

"Pete," Harrow said. "This is the second time you've saved me from my own foolishness and the second time you've saved Kay. I don't know what you intend doing, but I'm telling you what you are going to do: you're going to stay here with us at least until this blow over and we're safely under way to take 'no' for an answer."

TWO NEW MEMBERS ARE RECEIVED BY LANGHORNE SOROSIS

Report on International Relations Heard; Talk on Better Films

LANGHORNE, Jan. 5.—Thirty-five women were in attendance at the meeting of Sorosis in the library on Thursday, at which time two new members were received, Mrs. Rudolph Rodowski and Mrs. George Tetlow. Miss Marian Longshore gave a report on international relations, and a review of the Japanese situation and the munitions industries.

It was stated that on guest day, January 17th, a representative from George School, Newtown, will speak, the subject to be "The Central European Situation."

Mrs. Arthur F. Hagar, chairman of the juniors, reported that approximately $40 had been secured from the juniors' Christmas dance, which sum will be a benefit for the blind. A joint meeting of seniors and juniors will occur at the library on Tuesday evening, January 22nd, at 8.30.

As chairman of the nominating com-tee Mrs. Hagar was named. A review was given during the afternoon by Mrs. F. Mather, relative to better films. Owing to illness Mrs. M. Rothermel was unable to give her scheduled talk on current events, and in lieu of this Mrs. Lynn J. Harrington, president, arranged a series of games.

State's Population Heading Toward Stabilization Now

ment, the Board found, but with the exception of Delaware, Pennsylvania had the lowest percentage of population increase among bordering states. If this continues, Pennsylvania will reach stabilization at an earlier date than other states, the Board reported.

Both birth and death rates in Pennsylvania are showing a downward trend, the Planning Board found, but pointed out the excess of births over deaths on the whole shows that the source of future population is diminishing.

Nineteen counties had less people living within their borders in 1930 than they had in 1920, the Board reported. They were: Potter, Tioga, Bradford, Susquehanna, Cameron, Sullivan, Juniata, Perry, Bedford, Fulton, Jefferson, Forest, Clarion, Clearfield, Elk, Clinton, Indiana, Huntingdon and Somerset.

COLLEGE ENROLLMENT

Although slightly below "the prosperity plateau of a half dozen years ago," the full-time college enrollment of the United States is 5 per cent above that of last year and this year's freshman registration compared with last year's has increased 14 per cent.

Readers of these figures will enquire at once about the causes, of course. Dr. Raymond Walter, president of the University of Cincinnati and chairman of the committee on standards of the American Council of Education, the agency that surveys college enrollment annually, says the increase may be explained "as being due somewhat to student aid by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration; somewhat to the difficulty high school graduates have in landing jobs these days; somewhat to improved economic conditions in certain sections of the country; somewhat to the persistent faith of American fathers and mothers that higher education will benefit their children, so that they make sacrifices to send them to college."

Many will note that "improved economic conditions in certain sections of the country" is at least given a place among the factors accounting for Dr. Walter's figures. Even slight signs of economic improvement are cheering.

EVERYONE WALKS

There is food for interesting thought in the fact that, while we write and speak of pedestrians as though they were a class apart, they actually are not. Indeed, we may be thankful that in America the word "cavalier," which once used to describe the horseback-riding as distinguished from the walking classes, has found no such modern counterpart as "automobilist" or "gasolinier."

The heat with which we argue the rights and duties of the pedestrian and the motorist easily might persuade the proverbial visitor from Mars that here were two hostile classes on the point of flying at each other's throats. There is no subject on which we as a nation more readily become indignant. In fact, if it were not for the saving circumstance that the American pedestrian at any moment may step into a motor car and become an "automobilist," or the other way around, almost any slushy day really would provide all the provocation needed for a bloody insurrection.

We may be thankful that in America, at least, pedestrianism is alternately an art and a vice, but never, never a badge of class distinction.

CHRISTMAS THE YEAR 'ROUND

One more thought on Christmas: Let's try to keep our Christmas spirit through the year, and not discard it as we discard a mask merely because Dec. 25 has passed.

If we all could be as amiable and generous and thoughtful and kind and considerate and unselfish throughout the year as we are these days; if we lived as much for others and as little for self as we do the second two weeks of December, what a wonderful world this would be!

And that applies to families, neighbors, cities, states, nations.

made by Mrs. Robert Wenner, a member of the auxiliary and director of the State Firemen's Ladies' Auxiliary.

During the evening the group stood in silence in memory of the members of the fire company and auxiliary who died during the year.

Remarks were also made by Justice of the Peace Neal Nolan, former Councilman Charles C. Young, Dr. William H. Kunsman and Borough Solicitor Willard S. Curtin.

Councilman John G. Bleasdale was toastmaster and introduced the company's new president, Winfield S. Cox, who gave the address of welcome.

Bleasdale also introduced Councilman Frank S. Hibbs, who was one of the guests.

During the evening a turkey dinner, prepared by members of the ladies' auxiliary, was served.

HOLLYWOOD COMPELS FRENCHMEN TO DON "TAILS," WHITE TIES

By Nadia de Beaud

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

PARIS—(INS)—Hollywood's influence has succeeded where lay sermons and editorials failed. That is, compelling Frenchmen to put on "tails" and white ties.

How the cinema proprietors performed this miracle nobody knows, but the fact remains they did. They simply put "full dress de rigueur" on the invitations and the order was obeyed.

As a result, the best dressed crowds in Paris today are to be found at the first nights of American films. Parisians quite readily don evening attire, stovepipe hat and white tie, to see the beauty of Marion Davies or the suave performances of George Arliss.

First nights at the cinema now surpass in fashionable smartness the premiere of a play here. Indeed, when Sacha Guitry sent out invitations for the first performance of his latest play, "The New Testament," he made this appeal:

"We hope our friends will do for our play what they do regularly for an American movie; namely put on full dress."

The best the legitimate drama has been able to do is one full-dress night a month.

DRESS INITIALS ARE POPULAR WHEN MADE EMBROIDERED EFFECT

By Nadia de Beaud

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

PARIS—(INS)—There always has been something most attractive about embroidered initials on dresses, especially when these are so designed as to form an ornamental patch on a pocket or bodice.

Mrs. James Corrigan, the well known American hostess who spends much time abroad, wore just such a dress of jersey at the Crillon bar. It was beige with a basque effect and pockets the small collar crossed in front, the initials embroidered on the side. A blue buckin belt and a matching bleu belt had completed the outfit.

This initial craze has been most noticeable recently: curious silver brooches forming clumsy letters are much worn not only on dresses but also on hats. They are so cleverly made that only the closest examination reveals the letter, the effect from a distance being that of just a bright jewel.

CHAPTER XLV

Pete took out his remaining cigarettes and fumbled for a match. "Cigaret?" he asked.

The kid shook his head. "Got a match?" Pete asked.

The kid put his left hand into the side pocket of the gray coat and tossed Pete a handsome silver cigarette lighter. Pete lit the cigarette, then casually took out his soiled handkerchief and touched it to the flame to dry it.

From the corner of his eye he could see the kid watching him curiously. There was still no expression on the boy's face, but his big liquid eyes had widened.

Pete dropped the handkerchief onto the cheap cotton rug beside the bed and between the kid and himself. The flame spread to the rug, but Pete lay back casually and puffed at his cigarette as if, having suddenly lost his mind, the situation satisfied him perfectly.

The boy looked at Pete for the first time with a real expression on his face—one of fear and amazement. This was something out of his line that was clear.

The flames rose and caught the overhanging sheets of Pete's bed, but still Pete lay back, a bland smile on his face, as if sun-bathing on the pleasant sands of Daytona Beach.

Suddenly the boy snarled and rose, began stamping at the rug with a small narrow foot. This brought him nearer to Pete than he ever had been before. And, putting all his faith, all his hope in one kick, Pete caught the kid in the face with his heavily shod foot. He was up and upon him instantly, the two of them in the burning rug. One punch dazed the boy, another put him out. Pete pulled him off the rug, and the rug onto the bed, still burning, and began to act swiftly, making his plans as he worked. He peeled off the boy's coat and trousers, put them on, jammed the kid's hat onto the back of his head and put the two guns in his hip pockets. The clothes were much too small but he wasn't going to let that matter.

Pete tiptoed forward, to the door, found it unlocked, and opening it cautiously, dragged the boy through and dumped him in the hall. Then, a better plan came to him. He lifted the kid and stole along, using him as a shield in case someone started shooting. He took down the kid's guns in his own right hand, and used it for quick action, kept it ready.

He met no one. Evidently he was in a flat, not badly furnished except for the cubbyhole in which he had been a prisoner. He listened carefully but heard nothing. Dropping the kid on a divan he began walking around looking for whatever might be found.

Suddenly footsteps came to him from the hall outside. He ran to the divan, dumped the boy behind it where he wouldn't be seen and got behind it himself. A lock clicked, a door opened and a dark, heavy-lidded young man in a snow-gray hat, snow-gray spats and a brilliant blue suit, came in jingling a key-ring in his hand. He walked to a door, put the key in, turned it, opened the door, and started inside.

"Well, howzit today, kid?" he said, as he closed the door.

Instinct tensed all Pete's muscles. He stole forward, to that door and listened, just in time to catch the words, "Mr. Harrow." And the voice was Kay's.

Pete raised the gun, threw open the door and stepped in.

"Put your hands up!" he snapped at the man.

The man stared at him incredulously, but slowly began to raise his hands. Kay, in a bedraggled evening dress, stared with equal incredulity at Pete, then began to smile with utmost relief.

"Pete!"

"Kay—reach under his coat and get his gun. Then slap him a little and see if there's another."

Kay did as she was told and found only the one revolver in a shoulder holster.

"Hang onto it," Pete said. "Keep it on his middle."

Pete stepped back and looked out into the flat. No one was there but the kid and he was still unconscious.

Taking the man's key-ring, Pete hurried to the back door and unlocked it.

door and looked down. Wooden steps led from landing to landing and finally down into a deserted alley.

Pete ran back to the bedroom. "Come on, Kay."

Kay followed him out. As he shut the door he turned the key, locking the man in.

Kay and Pete ran through the flat to the back door. As they left, Pete heard another door open somewhere in the flat. He looked the back door, and seizing Kay under one arm, started down the steps, taking them two at a time, half dragging, half carrying the girl, who was losing her high-heeled dancing slippers. Above in the flat, he heard shouts and a pounding noise.

Once more Earl Harrow was hating himself quite thoroughly. It was a state he found himself in with some regularity but not very often. This time it was worse than ever. He had done too many things to too many people, he had made too great a mess of everything he had touched. He had paid the ransom money for Kay, of course, but he could not be sure that Caspar—he knew well enough Caspar was behind it—would keep the bargain, and he could not be sure that Caspar wouldn't find he was trying to hunt him down. If he did then certainly Caspar might take revenge through Kay, or might at the very least, refuse to turn her over without further payment. Harrow cursed himself for having been so impulsive and vindictive as to try to get Caspar instead of being satisfied that the ransom was no higher. Certainly Kay was well worth it, even from a business point of view, at this stage. And paying it and admitting the racketeer had won his game, had evened up for Harrow's obstinacy in the theater racket fight the season before.

And that wasn't all, Harrow reflected bitterly, as he paced up and down in his study. He had done a wrong perhaps to Pete Ryan, he had done a wrong to Kay by trying to let Ida Campbell and one to Ida by allowing her even to suspect that he might have a serious interest in her. And, now the latest was the word that Carlotta Vestra was back in town. He had read in a Broadway column the night before:

"Carlotta Vestra and she's back in town, viedly viedly mysterious about it all. Earl Harrow who used to sigh in tandem with Carlotta is being seen with Kay Owen, that Florida red-head who did the rescue act when Harrow was south this fall."

Harrow's emotions baffled him when he read that item. He didn't know whether to be glad Carlotta was back, or sorry, or whether even to be glad that she would be sure to read the mention of Kay Owen. Even, being glad of the latter, he wouldn't have been able to tell himself honestly that he was merely hoping Carlotta would be piqued by way of a little revenge on her for trotting off to the Riviera and getting this Prince who now seemed to be (at least temporarily) on ice.

Women, women, women . . . some day, maybe, he'd learn. He'd thought that at twenty, at thirty, and he was still thinking it, but now with all his trouble, past and present, had been because he had been susceptible.

He thought bitterly: If Carlotta had to come back into town, why did it have to be now?

He wanted no trouble with Carlotta—not that there might be any. Except that he remembered her dramatic, unbelievably violent temper which produced rages that he liked to believe transcended mere insanity but reached epic proportions requiring musical accompaniment by a sort of combined Wagner-Stravinsky. What a woman, Carlotta! He had known plenty of temperamental actresses, but none of them had been in with Carlotta.

His thoughts were taking this course when he heard steps outside his study and a familiar voice: "Mr. Harrow?"

Pete Ryan, of course. Now what? He sighed and stepped to the door.

fitting gray suit, but Kay, looking a little the worse for wear in the evening dress she had worn to his party.

"Pete—Kay!"

Harrow rushed forward and put his arms around her, then took her by the shoulders and held her off at arm's length, looking at her.

"Lord, but it's great to see you again! And you're really?" he asked anxiously.

"Absolutely!" she assured him. "I expect I look a sight."

"Never mind how you look! I was crazy with worry. And Pete! What's happened to you?"

It was a dramatic story that Pete told. "They nabbed me on the way to the station," he said. "I walked up toward town from here, you know, when I left, and a car picked me up to give me a lift. The next thing I knew I was tied up and blindfolded. They carried me somewhere into the city. I knew that. Then they chucked me in a stuffy little room with nothing but a bed and put some lily-faced young gunman on me as a guard. Nothing happened for a while and the kid wouldn't tell me a thing. Finally they blindfolded me again, dragged me to a telephone and somebody said he was going to ring your number and get Kay, and I was to say I was hurt and wanted her to come to me at a certain address. Of course, I wouldn't do it and they started beating up on me. I took it as well as I could till finally the big-wig fellow told them to stop and he talked to me again."

"He said 'Listen, lad—don't be a sucker! You're not worth a nickel to us except to save a little time and trouble. We're going to get the Owen kid anyway. If we don't get her tonight, then tomorrow when she goes into town, or anytime we get the chance, even if we have to bump a couple of mugs to do it. Now, she ain't going to be hurt. Get that through you. It's just a business proposition with us. But if we have to grab her by force, somebody's going to get a slug or two and it might be her, just by accident in case anything happened. So, if you want to do the right thing, just get out this phone and do like you're told."

Pete told his part in the trap with obvious shame. "But I saw it the way he said, as the least of two evils," he explained.

"You did the only thing you could do," Harrow assured him.

"Of course, Pete," Kay said. "Well, that's what happened. Then they stuck me back in my room till I was able to make a break: once I knew they really had Kay."

Pete told his experience with the kid and how he and Kay had gotten through the alley and had managed to find a cruising taxi before they were pursued.

"We just kept the one cab till we got here," Pete remarked. "He's outside now, waiting for his money."

"He'll get it—and more," Harrow said warmly. "It certainly was lucky you found him."

"You're telling me?" Pete asked with a sigh of fatigue.

"Pete," Harrow said. "This is the second time you've saved me from my own foolishness and the second time you've saved Kay. I don't know what you intend doing, but I'm telling you what you are going to do: you're going to stay here with us at least until this blow over and we're safely under way with the show and I'm not going to take 'no' for an answer."

"Well . . . thanks, Mr. Harrow," Pete replied. He turned to Kay, smiling shyly. "I don't know, though."

Kay seized his hand. "Of course, Pete! I'm not going to let you go."

"All right. That's the answer," Pete said.

"Good boy!" Harrow exclaimed. "Now I'll pay off that cab driver."

Pete turned to Kay, smiling ruefully. "Well, we can't seem to stay apart, can we?" he said.

"Why should we?" Kay asked. "We should long into his eyes, what she wanted to say, but he gave it up. The words were there; they weren't the right ones. Anyway, all she knew was that she was so glad to have Pete back."

CHAPTER XLVI

A bath and a few hours of rest refreshed Kay remarkably. That afternoon she was downstairs again, chic and lovely in a little tweed sports outfit, as if nothing had happened to disturb her life or the tranquil routine of this well appointed big house. She had to tell her story for everyone, of course—Ida, Boris Warren and Leschin when he came out from the city to see her.

That evening after dinner Harrow drew her into his study and sat down opposite her, almost knee-to-knee. She knew he had something rather important to say and she waited anxiously.

"The police are in on this job, of course, and they tell me they're going to be able to pin it on Nick Caspar," he began. "I certainly hope so."

"Isn't it dangerous now for you?" she asked.

Harrow smiled at her concern. "Not any more so than usual, I imagine. And it doesn't matter as much as you think, really."

He paused, then said: "I've my divorce at last. Got it yesterday. Fine time for taking much notice of such a thing, wasn't it?"

Kay didn't know how to answer him. She let him speak again.

"And, Kay—this little kidnapping experience taught me something. It taught me that I'm an utter fool where women are concerned. I've known it all along, but usually I managed to hurt only myself. I'm a little wiser now. I'm going to ask you something and I want you to be absolutely honest about it. You know, you owe me nothing. I'm sure I'm really going to make money on you and it wouldn't matter anyway. You owe me nothing in any way. So remember that when you answer."

Kay waited, afraid of what he might say.

"I need to be married, Kay," he said. "It's the only way. I'm no prize and it's asking a lot, but I am asking it. Will you marry me? I love you; you know that. And you rather like me, I can tell. If you think it's worth a chance, let's do it. And right away, before something else comes up. We can do it in town tomorrow in the Little Church Around the Corner. Will you, Kay?"

Again the inevitable problem, the necessity for the inevitable choice. It had come to a crisis at last—matter what Pete or my family said—just to see if you would give me a chance to realize my

TWO NEW MEMBERS ARE RECEIVED BY LANGHORNE SOROSIS

Report on International Relations Heard; Talk on Better Films

LANGHORNE, Jan. 5.—Thirty-five women were in attendance at the meeting of Sorosis in the library on Thursday, at which time two new members were received, Mrs. Rudolph Rodowski and Mrs. George Tetlow. Miss Marian Longshore gave a report on international relations, and a review of the Japanese situation and the munitions industries.

It was stated that on guest day, January 17th, a representative from George School, Newtown, will speak, the subject to be "The Central European Situation."

Mrs. Arthur F. Hagar, chairman of the juniors, reported that approximately $40 had been secured from the juniors' Christmas dance, which sum will be a benefit for the blind. A joint meeting of seniors and juniors will occur at the library on Tuesday evening, January 22nd, at 8:30.

As chairman of the nominating committee Mrs. Hagar was named. A review was given during the afternoon by Mrs. F. Mather, relative to better films. Owing to illness Mrs. M. Rothermel was unable to give her scheduled talk on current events, and in lieu of this Mrs. Lynn J. Harrington, president, arranged a series of games.

State's Population Heading Toward Stabilization Now

ment, the Board found, but with the exception of Delaware, Pennsylvania had the lowest percentage of population increase among bordering states. If this continues, Pennsylvania will reach stabilization at an earlier date than other states, the Board reported.

Both birth and death rates in Pennsylvania are showing a downward trend, the Planning Board found, but pointed out the excess of births over deaths on the whole shows that the source of future population is diminishing.

Nineteen counties had less people living within their borders in 1930 than they had in 1920, the Board reported. They were: Potter, Tioga, Bradford, Susquehanna, Cameron, Sullivan, Juniata, Perry, Bedford, Fulton, Jefferson, Forest, Clarion, Clearfield, Elk, Clinton, Indiana, Huntingdon and Somerset.

BOYS OF HIGH SCHOOL LOSERS IN CAGE CONTEST

By Jack Orr

Coach "Bill" Dougherty's nerve-stricken proteges were handed a 27-11 set-back in their opening game of the season with their alumnae last night on the high school floor.

It seemed the boys of the Cardinal and Gray had a bad attack of stage-fright as the game started and were shaky on both defense and offense. Passes were juggled and easy shots missed as the players went through their half-hearted motions.

During the entire first period the Bristol lads failed to net a point while the graduates of the school made two fouls and a twin-decker for four tallies.

"Nick" Huffnell was credited with Bristol's first 1935 basket as he made his foul shot good. A minute later Captain "Jim" Spencer added another free throw.

Foul shots by Fry and Pieo for the Alumni and finally a two-pointer by Spadaccino kept the "old boys" in the lead.

"Punk" Zefferi brought the Bristol total to five with a field and a foul shot as the half ended. Score: Alumni, 8; High School, 5.

In the latter half with "Johnnie" Cole and "Gigi" Herman going on the rampage the Alumni steadily pulled out of the reach of the Cardinal and Gray and scored almost at will.

"Gigi" Herman led the graduate scorers with eight tallies with John Cole close behind with three field goals.

Zefferi and Paul Nicol were the high men for the Bunnies, each caging a field and a foul for their evening's work.

On Tuesday night Doylestown High will be the attraction on the home court.

HIGH SCHOOL SEXTET LOSES TO ALUMNI TEAM

The Bristol high school sextet last night lost its initial basketball game when they were trounced by the Alumnae, 13 to 4, in the high school auditorium.

No scoring was done in the first five minutes of play. The Bristol guards did some fine work and kept the ball in their team's possession most of the time. However, the "grads" soon started scoring and by some fine passing work made four field goals at the call of half time. They consistently used the pass, forward to a center, and back to the forward under the basket.

It was a fast game but the height of the "grads" could not be overcome. Bunny Still and Betty Faber did a splendid job of guarding and their height proved a great advantage to them. They held their opponents to four foul shots and no field goals. All these were made by Pauline Napoli.

Margie Nills captured scoring honors for the Alumnae with three two-pointers and one foul shot for a total of seven points. End Whitt did her job as well scoring six points for her team.

FALLS CITY, Neb. — (INS)—Marcel Orn, 12, was playing with his baby sister when suddenly the baby picked up an object and hurled it into her brother's mouth. It slipped through the windpipe and a hasty operation was performed on the right lung. The "object" proved to be a stove bolt.

BOWLING ASSOCIATION TO HOLD MEETING

HOLLYWOOD—Despite strict French regulations on American pictures, Katharine Hepburn is the current film queen of Paris. This on the word of Charles Boyer, Gallic screen star, who has just returned to Hollywood to play in Walter Wanger's "Private World."

La Hepburn's performance in "Little Women" turned the trick. Boyer reports. After six months the film is still playing, in English, to capacity houses, and shows indications of doubling this run.

Next to the whimsical Katharine, the French actor rates Claudette Colbert. Joan Crawford, the former toast of Paris, has suffered in popularity, he says, because the exhibitors over there have been changing all the dialogue of her pictures into French. The voice chosen for Joan, according to Boyer, is rather high and doesn't fit Joan's personality at all.

Boyer, who has been having a belated honeymoon with Pat Peterson, will stay in Hollywood at least six months this time. Walter Wanger has him signed to a contract that assures it.

The John Hay (Jack) Whitneys have given Frances Dee and Joel McCrea a thoroughbred mare from their Kentucky stables. The horse, with the registered name, La Tillie, is a jumper and has won several a teeple chase events.

Frances Dee

Tillie. His pal, John Cromwell, will take over the job. And Frances says the horse is going to be hers.

One of the better paid actors, reports Grover Jones, was squelched so beautifully the other day.

Most of Hollywood contributes generously to the Community Chest, but this particular actor, although he could well afford it, began making excuses.

Finally the solicitor for the charity—he also is a studio executive—got tired of listening.

"Why don't you do them out of it like you did last year?" he snapped. "Give them a check."

This is a story of two extras who came through as winners in the recent elimination contest.

marshal's report also showed three deaths were caused by fire.

11th—The Rev. Robert Frazier, blind evangelist, gave the story of his life at Eddington Presbyterian Church, as the concluding message in a week of special evangelistic services.

12th—Morose over ill health, William E. Davis ended his life at his Beaver street home.

Two supplementary CWA projects for Bucks County were approved, these including work on the public school buildings in Bensalem Township, and in Bristol Township. A total of 45 men were to be given work, and the expenditures involved $6,215.

A new Bristol high school ring was adopted, it was announced, being most symbolic of the borough.

The Rev. William S. Voorhies, D. D., pastor of the Eddington Presbyterian Church, died suddenly following a stroke of apoplexy. Death occurred for the 72-year-old clergyman at his home.

13th—a reduction of 10 per cent, in the number of CWA employees in Bucks County was to be made, effective for the payroll period ending March 31st. Orders for such were received here from the state administrator.

A jury at Doylestown civil court returned a verdict in favor of William Winslow, retired Philadelphia newspaperman, in his suit against Percy L. Brick, Langhorne restaurant proprietor, the latter being sued for a personal loan.

William H. Murphy, clerk in the office of the Bucks County Commissioners, Doylestown, was injured when an automobile struck his car from which he was alighting. He suffered a fracture of the left ankle.

14th—The automobile of Dr. George T. Fox, stolen the day previous, was located near Pennsylvania State College in the intercollegiate indoor tennis tournament at Cornell University.

Upon going to his woodshed, Harvey M. Wismer, Plumsteadville, found Miss Mary Stever, 35, English teacher in the Quakertown high school, who appeared to be in a dazed condition. The young woman told that two men had forced her into her car and made her drive a distance. The car was found about 12 miles away. This was the second time that Miss Stever reported being "kidnaped."

15th—A jury in Bucks County civil court awarded a verdict for $280 and $54.50 costs and interest in favor of the plaintiff in the case of John Michael Feehan, executor of the last will and testament of Mary Leathert, late of Bristol, deceased, against Thomas Leathert, Bristol.

A strong plea for the building of a ship canal across New Jersey was made in Washington, D. C., by Mayor Thomas B. Stockham, Morrisville, and a group of advocates of the canal from New Jersey.

Farmers of Philadelphia and Bucks Counties, meeting in St. Francis Industrial School, Eddington, in annual session, were told by H. G. Niesley, State College, that "Buying power is not on a level with production."

A jury at Doylestown awarded Anna I. Stover, Kellers Church, a verdict for $300, she being plaintiff in a trespass case in which she claimed $500 damages done to her automobile which figured in an accident on the Quakertown-Doylestown highway. The defendant was Ralph L. Fosbenner, Quakertown.

16th—Fishermen believed that a poisonous substance in the water was killing fish in the Upper Delaware River between Erwinna and New Hope. The fish were found by the scores, floating on the water, and also at the bottom of the stream.

17th—A petition was being circulated in Bristol requesting President Roosevelt to utilize the Keystone Aircraft plant here for the manufacture of airplanes and for such other manufacturing purposes as may be deemed advisable and necessary. The petition was being circulated by four former employees of the Keystone plant.

18th—Fire of undetermined origin menaced the frame property at 653 Pine street, owned by Mrs. Mary Appleton, but which was unoccupied. A large quantity of furniture was stored in the place.

Flames over the week-end destroyed property in the upper part of Bucks County and near the county line to the value of $120,000 and $145,000. One of the fires occurred in an old landmark at Chalfont, the large mill on the property of H. L. Mitchell.

Mrs. William H. Cameron, Newportville, died in her 71st year.

19th—Clever investigation work by the Pennsylvania state police led to the apprehension of an 18-year-old Raubsville youth, his father and stepmother, charged with being implicated in the robbery of the Upper Black Eddy postoffice on the night of December 23, 1931. The three arrested were: Willard Allen, 42; Mrs. Lillie Allen, 33; and Clarence Allen, 18. Two men, already in prison, were to be charged with taking part in the robbery, and other arrests were expected.

Bristol Boy Scout Troop, No. 2, won the Lower Bucks District Championship in St. James' parish house.

Death claimed George W. Vandegrift, 88, at his Bridgewater home.

Eight district leaders for the boys' division of Youth Week to be observed here, were named at a meeting of the committee.

20th—Appointment of William H. Lewis, Jr., as a school director of Hilltown township until December, 1937, to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of Albert H. Brown, was announced by President Judge Hiram H. Keller and Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

James Dunn, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Houston Dunn, Philadelphia, formerly of Bristol, was killed while at play, when a chum, George M. Coates, Jr., also of Philadelphia, fired a duelling pistol at Dunn.

21st—B. Franklin McIlhenny, 575 Swann street, died after a lengthy illness.

It was learned that the gun, used by George Biester of Salem, N. J., to kill his wife, infant child, and himself, was "borrowed" from Joseph Fox, a former Bristol resident. The murderer-suicide took the gun from the garage where he and the owner of the weapon were employed.

Two Philadelphia boys, aged 15 and 14, were picked up here by police officers. Police in Philadelphia were notified of the whereabouts of the boys, who had been missing from their homes for three days.

Three bus passengers were injured, when a bus of the Delaware River Coach Company and a truck crashed near the Neshaminy Creek bridge on Bristol Pike, Croydon. Those injured were: George Souffas, Bristol; William Reesiger, and Timothy Coyne, Croydon.

Celebrating his 83rd birthday in court, Joseph Clark, Forest Grove, took the stand in his own behalf in civil court, Doylestown. Clark was the defendant in a suit in which Harvey W. Walton, Roslyn, was suing for damages amounting to $2,765.96, in an automobile accident.

22nd—Judges Keller and Boyer handed down the opinion of Judge F. A. Marks of the Orphans' Court of Berks County, in the Orphans' Court of Bucks County, in the petition of Rudolf P. Hommel, archaeologist, asking for a declaratory decree. The judge ruled that the trustees of the late Dr. Henry C. Mercer estate, could drop Hommel from employ of the estate. The dispute was over a Mercer research bequest. The trustees were ruled as being in supreme authority in the case.

23rd—An order handed down in the court of Bucks County divided the fifth ward of Bristol borough into two election districts.

When a trailer attached to a truck struck the side of a bus near Oxford Valley, a Philadelphia and a New York resident were hurt. They were treated at the scene by highway patrolman Kelly.

Harold Johnson, Trevoise, was adjudged the winner for the lower end district spelling contest, held at Langhorne high school for "old time" spellers. Johnson, by virtue of his win, was to spell at Doylestown, later, when the county champion would be decided.

24th—Firemen had a stiff battle with a fire at the restaurant, dance hall and other buildings of Dietrich Froelich, Old York Road, near Jamison. Damage to the barn and other buildings which caught fire was estimated at $15,000.

Two Bristol school teachers were involved in an automobile accident as they returned from the inter-scholastic meet at Quakertown. Only one was hurt, namely Miss Edie Watson. The car of the driver, Miss Anna Heritage, was said to have skidded on a grade which was covered with snow and ice. The machine turned over.

Quakertown was accorded first honors and Bristol borough second honors in both classes A and C at the Bucks County Interscholastic meet at Quakertown.

25th—Suit for $3025 was begun when the school district of Hatboro, Montgomery County, filed an action in assumpsit against the school district of Warminster Township, Bucks County. Pupils from Warminster attended Hatboro high school and tuition and other costs were bases for the suit. The district in which the students resided claimed the high school students were to attend the Southampton school.

With the circulation of petitions containing the name of Thomas B. Stockham, Morrisville, as a candidate for general assembly on the Republican ticket, it was learned that Dr. W. Albertson Haines was not a candidate to succeed himself, owing to press of private business.

An epidemic of measles in Newtown, Langhorne and surrounding areas was causing considerable uneasiness among residents of those districts.

Operators of two motor vehicles were arrested in connection with the death of a Bucksville farmer who met death while returning from a visit to relatives in Philadelphia. The victim was Patrick Hughes, 52. The driver of the first car which struck the man was Harry Greife, and the operator of a bus which hit the man's body was Clarence S. Roberts, 33, Phillipsburg, N. J.

26th—The champion "old time" speller named for Bucks County was Simon S. Lint, a former teacher of the Milford Township schools. He won the county title after a 32-round old-fashioned spelling bee at the county court house.

Charged with beating his wife and threatening to kill her and his daughter, John Sansowski, 56, of Gardenville, was arrested by state police.

28th—A resident of Fallsington for 65 years, Mrs. Charlotte Green Mull Moon, widow of M. Watson Moon, died after a three weeks' illness.

It was announced that a corps would be organized to take a census of the unemployed in Bucks County, to provide "white collar" jobs for 90 people over a period of 60 days.

29th—All CWA workers in Bucks County were laid off, with the statement that only those eligible for relief would be given jobs thereafter.

30th—Thirty-four farmers in Bucks County, it was stated, had had their efforts rewarded during the past several years by having their names placed among those of the Keystone 400 Bushel Potato Club.
